U.S. Makes Its A-Bombs Dirtier, Senator Says

By Herman Chauka

APRIL 30 — While proclaiming the need to continue nuclear tests to develop a "clean" bomb "for the sake of humanity," the U.S. government is doctoring its bomb stock pile to make it even "dirtier," according to charges leveled by Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.).

Appearing on a nation-wide TV show, April 27, Anderson made the sensational charge that military leaders had "piled bombs out of the stock pile and inserted something that makes them dirtier." Anderson is ranking member of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy.

Asked why the military would want to increase the lethal fallout from the bombs, Anderson cogently replied: "We want them effective. You don't have bombs in order to have Fourth of July explosions. You have them for destruction." (In refuting the "clean" bomb claim, independent scientists have explained that the only way to effectively reduce fallout is to reduce the destructive force of the bombs.)

MYSTERY TO THEM?
In reply to Anderson's charge, the Defense Department issued an ambiguously worded denial. It said it "doesn't know what the Senator had in mind when he referred to the military encouraging the development of dirtier weapons."

Yesterday Anderson proposed that the Senate Armed Services Committee summon relevant witnesses from the Pentagon and AEC to a hearing and agree in advance to issue a public statement on the accuracy of his charges. Continuing the attack, he added, "We talk clean on one side and we stockpile dirty on the other side."

Meanwhile, humanity was given new cause for concern when Dr. Linus Pauling, leading biochemist and top-ranking educator on the danger of the bombs, revealed that from a long-range viewpoint, cancer-breeding strontium-90 is not nearly as deadly as the element carbon-14 which is also released by nuclear explosions. From official figures issued by the AEC on the amount of carbon-14 released by nuclear explosions, Dr. Pauling concluded: "The danger to the race over five to ten thousand years, if the race survives, is on the order of 200 times as great from carbon 14 as from strontium 90."

He estimated that the carbon-14 from atomic and hydrogen bombs already exploded will cause five million genetically defective children in the next 300 generations and millions of cases of bone cancer and leukemia.

Ironically, a greater amount of carbon-14 is produced by relatively "clean" bombs than by "dirty" ones. The AEC "questions" if the danger is as great as Dr. Pauling estimates, but concedes that it represents "an appreciable genetic hazard over a period of several thousand years."

Socialist Fund Enters Last Month of Drive

By Murry Weiss
National Fund Drive Director

APRIL 30 — The $20,000 Socialist Expansion Fund drive is now entering its third and final month with all the branches of the Socialist Workers Party ready for the big push to fulfill their quotas 100% by the May 31 deadline.

After the banner week ending April 22, in which $2,528.90 was received, this last week witnessed a lull with only $987.90 coming in. The South retained the lead it had captured last week; Detroit remained in second place; Seattle moved up from eighth to third place; and the branches with the three largest quotas, Twin Cities, Los Angeles and New York are running close together with 65%, 62% and 61% fulfillment respectively.

Mail continues to come in from friends responding to our appeal for help in the drive. A socialist from the state of Washington, who is "87 years young," writes, "I've been a socialist since 1893. I never joined any party, but contributed some cash to all of 'em. I heard Gene Debs lecture every time I had the chance; and when I die I'm going to look him up. I'm a freethinker, and, 'The world is my country and to do good is my religion.' — Tom Paine. Here is $1.00 to make good that statement in regard to contributions. I read the Militant and don't need specs to do it." — W. S.

A high school student from the Bronx sent us $1.38 for the drive last week with the message, "I am watching the Socialist Expansion Fund's progress and I sure hope that it will be successful."

A friend from Brooklyn, whom we haven't heard from in some time, sent $15.00 for the drive with the "I'll Help" form. (See page two.)

We are expecting a big week as the opening of the last month in the drive. Many branches have scheduled fund-raising affairs over the May Day weekend and a full program of activity around the Fund is planned for the entire month. Look for meetings and social affairs in your area.

EMPLOYERS STEP UP ATTACKS ON LABOR

Steel Union Holds Rally For Jobless

By Moses Peterson

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO—The first city-wide mass meeting of unemployed to be called here during the current economic crisis took place Wednesday night, April 23. About 800 of the city's 15,000 to 18,000 unemployed turned out for the meeting which was sponsored by the Mahoning County CIO Council in cooperation with James P. Griffin, director of District 26 of the United Steelworkers of America.

The turnout was a fairly good response since the meeting was announced only one week before being held, and was arranged for a small hall, and was poorly publicized. The union leaders were forced to call the meeting because of rank-and-file pressure building up in the local unions over two basic issues — surplus food and Supplemental Unemployment Benefits. Mahoning County government officials have so far refused to distribute federal surplus food to needy unemployed although nearby counties in Pennsylvania and elsewhere in Ohio are doing so. SUB payments, although provided for in Steel Workers' contracts, have been denied Ohio workers by action of the state government.

ACT UNDER PRESSURE

Officials of District 26—where out of 67,000 union members, 25,000 are fully and another 25,000 partly unemployed—had played down surplus food distributions as "insignificant" and had followed a "court-action-only" policy on the SUB fight. They called the Youngstown meeting only after three of the biggest basic-steel locals went on record for an unemployed demonstration in the state capitol.

The meeting was largely taken up with exhorting the workers to solve their problems by electing Democrats. About a third of the audience walked out when Griffin introduced some of these politicians. The union officials took an improved position on surplus food, however, and the very fact that the meeting was held was a step in the right direction and a victory for the workers. This was reportedly the first unemployed mass meeting called by the steel union in its own name in Ohio. It reflects the deep fear and growing unrest in this huge steel center which is in a depression, with a capital "D." Fear has been greatly increased recently by the announced permanent closing of several plants.

Farmers Fight Back

About 200 angry "wheat rebels" in Ohio last month protested federal wheat controls by rallying at the farm of Dr. F. Whiteleather (arrow), president of the Independent Farmers of Ohio. They barred federal crop surveyors (in auto) from the farm. (See story on U.S. farmers on p. 4.)

Boston-Area Colleges Hear Myra T. Weiss on Socialism

APRIL 25 — Students at three universities in the Boston area had an opportunity to hear Militant staff writer, Myra Tanner Weiss, speak on socialism this week.

On April 21, Mrs. Weiss spoke to an afternoon meeting at Boston University, after which she was interviewed on a campus radio program by two students, a representative of the faculty and a moderator. That evening Mrs. Weiss spoke to an audience of about 65 at Wellesley, a women's college. The following afternoon, April 22, she discussed socialism with a small group at Brandeis University.

At Boston University, Mrs. Weiss's meeting was sponsored by the Citizenship Project, directed by Prof. George D. Blackwood. Nationally known figures of all political parties have been invited to speak to students at Boston University by this organization. In the 1956 election campaign, Farrell Dobbs, Socialist Workers Party candidate for President, addressed the group.

Mrs. Weiss spoke on "Socialism and Peace." "We can assume," she said, "that everyone wants peace. Everyone will say so and there is no good reason to think they don't mean it. The problem is to find out why, despite this universal opposition to war, periodically, the world is at war. In order to solve this problem, it is necessary to use the methods of science."

Unions Held 'Bigger Threat than Russia' At Boss Convention

APRIL 30—As ominous for American workers as the deepening recession is the open preparation by Big Business of a campaign against wage levels, working conditions and the unions themselves.

Blatant expression of business circles' eagerness to take advantage of the workers' economic plight by launching an assault on organized labor came from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce convention in Washington, D.C., April 28 to 30. The carefully-selected speakers list featured labor-hating attorney Theodore B. Iserman. He called for a crusade against unions whose present strength "constitutes a more immediate threat to our way of life than does the military might of Soviet Russia, with her sputniks, ballistic missiles and nuclear weapons."

The next speaker was the notorious "labor-prober," Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona, whose idea of satisfactory labor-management relations is that which prevailed during the construction of the Egyptian pyramids. Like a football coach steaming up his team during the half, he berated employers for "weakness, even cowardice" in dealing with unions.

PICTURE IN AUTO

That the anti-labor offensive is not mere words is shown by the attitudes of the bosses in the nation's main pattern-setting industries — auto and steel. United Auto Workers' negotiations with General Motors, Ford and Chrysler have got nowhere. The only thing GM and Ford have offered to "give" so far is renewal of the old contract for two years. As the expiration date of the contract is fast approaching without any satisfactory agreement in sight, UAW President Reuther requested a three-month extension of the GM contract while negotiations continued. GM flatly refused and announced that the contract would expire at midnight April 29. Ford Vice-president Bugas quickly chimed in with a statement that GM's contract cancellation notice was "a very sound approach."

No contract expires in steel but a nine-cent wage increase is due under the existing contract on July 1. The steel corporations are continuing an unrelenting campaign to force the union to give up this automatic wage raise. Now they are trying to get Eisenhower and to call in both union President McDonald and U.S. Steel Chairman Blough to work out a voluntary wage and price freeze in steel. As Business Week puts it, "Right now the union is standing pat, but a deeper recession just might bring concessions."

Offers Extension

According to the same magazine there is a concerted move among auto parts manufacturers and tool-and-die shops to "try and get the annual raise and cost-of-living monkeys off their backs" this year.

Unemployment, it is true, is undermining the bargaining position of each separate union, but a concerted drive by all labor—especially in the political field through the formation of a Labor Party—would push back the employer offensive.

RR EMPLOYMENT

Employment on Class I railroads dropped to the lowest figure since 1899 for the month of January. Employment on railroads, including switching and terminal companies fell to 931,000. This puts rail jobs lower than at any time during the 1930's.

The Rockefeller 'Economic-Growth Plan'

By Myra Tanner Weiss

APRIL 29 — The attractive power of planned economy is so great that even the capitalist world, despite its abhorrence of Soviet economy, attempts to present its economic policy as a "plan." Capitalist India, in imitation of China has its "five-year" plans — at least in name. Capitalist nations as far apart as Egypt and England have their "five-year" plans. Even Eisenhower came out with a "five-year" road-building plan.

And now we have Mr. Rockefeller himself, Nelson Rockefeller, presenting his "10-year plan to bring the United States to new heights of economic productivity and good living for its citizens," as it is described by the April 21 New York Times.

The yearning for a planned intervention into the chaotic economic life that exists under capitalism is not difficult to understand. After all, when man meets an obstacle in nature — when a mountain or a river is in the way — he doesn't just give up. He sits down and makes out plans for a tunnel or a bridge. Pretty soon the plan, which existed first in his brain, exists in concrete and steel. The obstacle is overcome. Why can't this principle be used to overcome economic obstacles such as poverty, insecurity, depression?

SOVIET STATISTICS

In addition to the innate attractive power of planned economy are the economic facts about Soviet production. Long ago, despite bureaucratic obstacles to intelligent planning, the Soviet Union demonstrated the far more dynamic character of planned economy over capitalism. During the early 1930's, Soviet production jumped 250% while U.S. production declined by about 25%.

Since World War II, China has added its contribution to the experience of planned economy. Like Russia, China started from a backward base. Its present rate of growth, thanks to help from the Soviet orbit, is even faster than that achieved in early Soviet development. In its first two five-year plans China is working toward the following increases: Electricity: 500%; Steel: 800%; Coal: 300% and Cement: 400%.

While one may doubt that these goals will be fully realized, no one can challenge the unrivaled rate of growth of Chinese economy.

To make the contrast even sharper, U.S. economic growth, made possible since 1940 only by military spending and by war, has stopped. Instead of competing in growth rates with the USSR and China, U.S. production has entered a serious decline. As Allen Dulles, director of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency, said, April 28, "Since 1956, Soviet output has continued its rapid expansion. In the first quarter of 1958, Soviet industrial production was 11 per cent higher than a year ago. In comparison, the Federal Reserve Board index shows a decline of 11 per cent in the United States."

Rockefeller's "10-year plan" for U.S. economic growth proposed a possible and "highly desirable" rate of 5% a year for the next decade. In the last ten years, according to the report, economic growth averaged 4% a year. An advance to 5% would constitute a significant increase in production.

Work on the Rockefeller Brothers Fund report began in June, 1956, when boom conditions still prevailed. The panel of 30 businessmen, economists and educators, with Nelson Rockefeller acting as overall chairman, used the 4% growth rate as a starting point in their "plans."

PLAN SLIGHTLY UPSET

As Business Week, April 26, reported, "When this broad-gauged economic forecast was being written, its authors obviously assumed that a drastic change in the country's growth rate of the last ten years was unlikely. As the report neared final approval and publication, it became clear to some influential members of the group that the recession, [which had meanwhile intervened] if allowed to proceed at its current pace, would wreck the long-term calculations. There were some hurried consultations, not only to speed up publication but also to preface the report with a call for immediate action to pull the economy out of its decline."

How can the anarchy of capitalist economy be more graphically demonstrated than in this simple fact that a so-called "plan" for 10-year progress can't even be completed before its calculations are thrown out of kilter by a "downturn" in production anticipated by the "planners"?

Of course, the very idea of planned capitalism is a contradiction in terms. The holy of holies in the "free-enterprise" system, is the right of the individual capitalist to dispose of his capital as he pleases. No matter how many millions of workers, farmers and small businesses may be ruined in the process, this "right" of the capitalist is the basic individual right in the profit system. Any interference with it is — oh, horrors — "socialistic."

But then Mr. Rockefeller hasn't turned socialist. He doesn't propose in his "plan" to interfere with private control of production. In fact, he doesn't really have a plan. He is merely saying how nice it would be if production went up faster than it has in the past, and that people ought to trust capitalism's ability to achieve it. He can't be blamed if production stopped going up at all. That's just the way the cookie crumbled.

Dulles Admits Peril In SAC Flights

U.S. claims that SAC bomber flights toward the Arctic border of the Soviet Union cannot possibly be the accidental source of war has been refuted as false by none other than John Foster Dulles. Marshalling arguments for his "aerial inspection" proposal, Dulles conceded, according to James Reston in the April 28 N.Y. Times, that "Moscow is justified, not in charging the United States with menacing the Soviet Union, but in recognizing that such flights... do increase the threat of accidental warfare and require further study and control... there is always the danger that human derangement will cause a ghastly error..."

"Toward A Socialist America"

TOWARD A SOCIALIST AMERICA. A Symposium of Essays by Fifteen Contemporary Socialists. Edited by Helen Alfred. New York: Peace Publications, 1958. $3.50. Cloth. $1.50. Paper.

There is a revival of interest in socialist ideas in the United States as a result of the Soviet Sputnik and of the recession. Quite fittingly the radical movement is increasing its activities and its output of literature. The book of 15 essays entitled Toward a Socialist America is part of that new literature.

As Helen Alfred states in her introduction, "The reader will soon discover that the contributors are not all of one 'hue' of socialist thought. Nor do they approach consideration of a socialist economy from the same, or even similar backgrounds of activity and experience. It may be said, however, that the authors are as one in the belief that the social ownership, planning and management of key sectors of production in the United States are essential, and inevitable."

ON POLITICAL ACTION

The essays are grouped under three headings: Part I, "American Workers Need Socialism"; Part II, "Transition to a Socialist Based Economy"; and Part III, "Wanted: An American People's Party." But because they are so intimately connected in reality, all three questions are dealt with by almost every author. Thus the case for socialists engaging in independent political action against the capitalist parties is convincingly presented by John T. McManus, whose essay appears in Part I.

A number of articles provide first-class ammunition for basic socialist education. Among these are Bertha Capen Reynolds' essay on "The American Family and Socialism," which is a review of the problems that beset the majority of working people in time of capitalist boom. The case for socialism that Mrs. Reynolds makes is only strengthened by the advent of the depression.

"The People and Planning," by Victor Perlo is a well-written explanation of what socialists mean by planned production for use. The author underscores that such planning will be thoroughly democratic in character.

In an article of special interest entitled "Public Power Speeds the Pace to Social Planning and Ownership," Reuben W. Borough urges socialists to draw on this country's experiences with the Tennessee Valley Authority to advocate the taking over of basic industries by regional and national public authorities similar to the TVA. "Particularly," he says, "it is important that the economy be invaded by the appropriate public authority" which would take over "this sector's subsidized 'free enterprise' corporations and their operation . . . not for national pillage, but for public benefit."

APPRAISAL OF USSR

A number of authors draw on achievements in the Soviet Union and China to prove the case for socialism. This is absolutely valid, in my opinion, where the economic successes scored by the socialized economy of these countries are adduced as evidence. (Perlo does so, for instance to indicate how planned production for use in this country would greatly increase the annual rate of economic growth over the one obtaining under capitalism.) But to claim that the Soviet orbit countries enjoy political freedom or trade-union rights, (as Perlo also does), is to weaken the argument because it flies in the face of facts. It is imperative, I believe, that socialists frankly acknowledge the lack of political freedom for working people in the Soviet Union, that they vigorously criticize that lack and that they support the Soviet masses in their struggle for democratic rights.

One contributor, Paul Sweezy, does address himself to the lack of political freedom in the Soviet Union in his article "What Is Socialism?" Here, Sweezy holds that democracy will come by means of reforms from on top. Since the book was compiled, Sweezy visited the Soviet Union, and, without changing his generally pro-Soviet outlook, came to the conclusion that democratization "will come . . . not as a gift from above but as the result of struggle from below." (See Monthly Review, February 1958.)

Despite important disagreements that revolutionary socialists may have with one or another of the essays, this book deserves study and circulation by every radical worker.

— Daniel Roberts

An Appeal To All Socialists

Dear Friends:

There is growing evidence that 1958 is the year for American socialists to take a big step forward, unite and act together, make many new friends, and further the objective of building a reinvigorated and influential socialist movement in the United States.

Towards this end the Socialist Workers Party is urging socialist groups to combine forces and wage a campaign for United Socialist Tickets in this year's state and congressional elections.

Our members and friends have already raised the necessary number of signatures to place socialist tickets on the ballot in Michigan, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In California various socialist groups and independent radicals, have united behind the candidacy of Holland Roberts for State Superintendent of Schools.

In Chicago socialists have united around Rev. Joseph P. King's candidacy for Congressman from the Second District.

In New York State, socialists, independents and various progressive forces are discussing the possibility of launching a United Independent-Socialist Ticket in the elections for governor and senator. If such a ticket is launched and gains sufficient support (50,000 votes) the ticket would acquire legal party status.

The $20,000 Socialist Expansion Fund drive, now being conducted by the SWP, will be used to advance the movement for United Socialist Tickets. The drive started on March 1 and will end May 31. Extraordinary efforts are being made by socialist workers throughout the country to raise this sum in full and on time.

Do you agree with the aim of the Socialist Expansion Fund? If you do, will you help by making a contribution? Any contribution, however small, will be deeply appreciated.

Fraternalty Yours,
Murry Weiss
Socialist Expansion Fund Director

Brief Tito-Kremlin Rift

By George Lavan

Relations between the Kremlin and the Tito regime appear now to be on the mend, but the lesson of the sudden flare-up has not been lost on the countries of East Europe. Indeed, there is every reason to believe that Moscow staged the whole blow-up as a way of warning these countries against seeking national independence from the Kremlin such as Yugoslavia has achieved.

The setting was the Seventh Congress of the Communist League of Yugoslavia, the first congress to be held since the death of Stalin and the resumption of diplomatic relations with the USSR. It was to be a gala event and, in token of the growing rapprochement between Tito and Khrushchev since their falling-out over Hungary, invitations had been extended to 51 Communist Parties throughout the world to send fraternal delegations. Most had already accepted and named their delegations.

STANDARD POSITIONS

In mid-March the Yugoslavs sent out the draft of the program which would be submitted to the Congress for adoption. This 100,000-word document contained nothing new. In it were the standard theoretical formulations of their points of difference with Moscow, notably: 1) the "separate roads to socialism" position; 2) justification of Yugoslavia's neutralism by deploring the division of the world into two great power blocs; 3) equality among the non-capitalist countries rather than primacy of any one (the USSR).

While the Kremlin may not have been pleased by the Yugoslav positions, it certainly was not surprised by them. In 1956 Khrushchev had even accepted the "separate roads to socialism" formulation. After the Hungarian Revolution he had second thoughts about it, but finally a mutual truce on the subject appeared to have been worked out. The 12-nation declaration, which issued from the meeting in Moscow following last November's 40th anniversary celebration of the Russian Revolution, reverted to the old thesis of the USSR's hegemony in the Soviet bloc and for that reason the Yugoslav delegation abstained from signing it. But on the other hand it did sign the Peace Appeal.

Further indications of collaboration between Moscow and Belgrade were the recent visit of Hungarian puppet Kadar to Yugoslavia, the announcement of impending visits to Belgrade by Soviet President Voroshilov and by Tito to Warsaw. Thus, as far as the Yugoslavs were Tito, Khrushchev and Bulganin, shown at time of Soviet-Yugoslav reconciliation in 1955. Since then there has been: strife during 1956 Polish and Hungarian events; reconciliation last summer; sudden new Kremlin attack on Tito last month, which ended just as suddenly.

concerned, their Congress with its fraternal delegations from the USSR, China and East Europe was to mark the extent to which the Tito regime had patched up relations with the Kremlin despite adherence to its own political positions.

AMEND DRAFT
Indeed, to make its draft program more palatable to the Kremlin, a series of amendments, including one placing the blame on NATO for division of the world into rival military blocs, were publicly offered by the Yugoslav Central Committee on April 18 — four days before the Congress was due to convene in Ljubljana. This was supposed to have been done on the urging of the Gomulka regime in Poland, which as a result of its 1956 defiance of the Kremlin has achieved, not full independence like Yugoslavia but, a semi-independence.

But the mollifying amendments did not have the desired effect. Moscow had decided to make a dramatic, public demonstration. It was like the firing of both barrels of a shotgun at once. On April 19, the day of Tito's inauguration for a new term as President of Yugoslavia, Kommunist, the magazine of the Soviet Communist Party, issued a lengthy and bitter attack on the draft program of the Yugoslav CP. At the same time Belgrade was forced to announce that all Communist Parties had cancelled their acceptances of invitations to the Congress in Ljubljana.

The unusually long (6,000 words) article in Kommunist, which was reprinted and quoted throughout the Soviet bloc, blasted the Yugoslav draft program as a gross departure from Marx and Lenin and as an example of revisionist "national communism," whose adoption would undermine the Yugoslav's position with all Communist Parties. The Moscow-imposed boycott of the Yugoslav Congress was complete, including significantly the Polish party.

TITO HITS BACK

As might be expected, the Yugoslavs reacted with anger. Tito's opening speech to the Congress was scornful of the Kremlin's criticisms and reiterated some of the Yugoslav positions which the proposed amendments sought to soften or delete. On the second day Soviet-bloc diplomats who attended solely as "observers" staged a demonstration walkout during the speech of Yugoslav Vice-President Rankovic just prior to a session which, as they could see from their advance copies of the speech, was particularly critical of the Kremlin. Only the Polish ambassador "by accident" remained in the diplomatic gallery.

By the evening of the Congress' third day, however, anxieties as to how far Moscow intended to push its campaign against Titoism were considerably allayed. Ekaterina Furtseva, a member of the Soviet CP's powerful Presidium, visiting Warsaw, told reporters that "of course" Soviet President Voroshilov would still visit Belgrade next month and that there could never be a repetition of the Soviet-Yugoslav break of 1948. "We have been and we will be friends with Yugoslavia — always," declared Mme. Furtseva.

ATTACK STOPS

Then, almost as if it were a matter of turning off a faucet, the Soviet-bloc press campaign against the Tito party was turned off. The Yugoslav Congress responded in kind. The speeches on the last two days (April 25 and 26) no longer breathed defiance of the Kremlin but rather were filled with moderation and appeals for "comradely relations." For example, Yugoslav Foreign Minister Koca Popovic told the Congress the "conflict with the Russian comrades in essence is a very good thing" because it brought differences into the open and this experience would stimulate more cooperation within the "socialist" camp. Several days after the Congress it was announced that Marshal Tito's scheduled visit to Warsaw, which had been called into question by the boycott, was on again.

King Hits Dulles on Bomb Tests

Rev. Joseph P. King, socialist candidate for Congress, Second District, Illinois.

CHICAGO, April 25 — The right of the American people to decide the issue of nuclear testing was vigorously pressed in a statement issued today by Reverend Joseph P. King, independent socialist candidate for Congress from the Second District.

"In the name of the cherished traditions of American democracy," declared King, "I challenge Secretary of State Dulles' right to decide for the American people, or for humanity (as he claims), that U.S. bomb-testing shall continue."

"Dulles argues," he said, "that the Administration decided to continue exploding U.S. bombs — although the Soviet Union announced it would stop its tests — in 'fairness' to the people. When was the American people ever consulted? Yet wouldn't letting them decide whether to stop or go ahead with the testing be the really fair thing to do?"

King did not confine his criticisms to the Republicans but attacked the Democrats as well by pointing out that they had conducted the first tests — the atomic bombing of the people of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Hailing the great anti-bomb demonstrations now taking place in many countries, King urged the American people to demonstrate their solidarity and friendship for these movements.

"We should make it clear to the people of the entire world that Dulles and his associates speak for the ruling clique of war-minded capitalists and not the majority of Americans," he said.

It was also announced by the Washington Park Forum, of which King is President, that a United Protest Meeting to "Ban the Bomb" will be held on Sunday, May 11, 3 p.m., at 306 East 43rd Street.

In addition to Rev. King, speakers at the rally will include: Truman Kirkpatrick of the American Friends Service Committee; Eleanor Franklin of the Women for Peace and Unity; Jack Hirsch, a socialist youth leader; Sam Kushner of the staff of the Worker; Howard Mayhew of the Socialist Workers Party; Rev. W. T. Baird of Essex Community Church; and John Hamilton, chairman of the Washington Park Forum.

Canada Socialists Trade Views

The process of socialist regrouping in Canada took an important step forward when over 160 socialists of various persuasions participated in a Montreal forum in March sponsored by the Council of Socialist Clubs. The meeting is reported in the April issue of Workers Vanguard, voice of the Socialist Educational League.

The Council of Socialist Clubs comprises a group of seven clubs in Montreal recently expelled from the Labor Progressive (Communist) Party. The LPP has suffered a devastating decline since the 20th Congress under the bureaucratic control of Tim Buck.

Participants in the forum included Jacques Rouleau and Henri Cagnon, former LPP leaders who ran in the recent elections as independent socialists, Ross Dowson, independent socialist candidate in Toronto, and George (Paddy) Stanton, chairman of the Socialist Educational League.

The meeting was opened by Danny Daniels, a former leader of the now-defunct Canadian Seamen's Union, one-time editor of the LPP youth, and now

Canadian correspondent for the National Guardian. Hailing the candidacies of Cagnon, Rouleau and Dowson, Daniels said: "We should not hide that we are socialists but openly proclaim our aims, our views, and thus let the people that are involved in mass struggles be aware that it is socialists that are fighting for the needs of the people."

In an apparent reference to his experience in the LPP, for which he had been a leading French-Canadian spokesman, Cagnon declared, "We must change all our concepts of the struggle . . . ideas we've held about the 'vanguard' which has all the good ideas, which can't err, and which has been singled out by destiny."

SOCIALIST TASKS

Bob Haddon, long-time leader of the Fur and Leather Workers Union, greeted the forum as an important step toward the unification of socialists in Canada. If the socialists were united, he said, and had a clear, firm perspective, "they could very quickly transform the situation."

Gerald Fortin, former LPP national committee member, hailed the gathering — together of forces that had left the LPP and urged them to find their way back into socialist activity to avoid political demoralization.

Stanton praised the forum as an avenue for free discussion through which "we shall hammer out a program" to forge an effective socialist movement in Canada.

Harriman Beats Drum For "Liberation"

By Harry Ring

Along with "massive retaliation," John Foster Dulles has made the phrase "liberation of the enslaved people of East Europe" synonymous with the drive toward World War III. But during recent years, world-wide anti-war sentiment has forced a slowing down of the U.S. war drive. This is why the issue of East Europe was not raised at the 1955 Geneva conference and why it probably will not be on the agenda of the summit conference now projected.

The Administration's tactical retreat on East Europe has drawn steady fire from the get-tough-with-Russia spokesmen in the Democratic party. The latest such attack was leveled in an April 27 speech by Averell Harriman, Democratic candidate for re-election as Governor of New York, and a man who is being touted in some liberal and radical circles as a "progressive" alternative to cold-war Republicans.

Harriman declared that the U.S. must insist that East Europe be on the agenda of a summit parley and must "keep raising the question over and over again." Castigating Eisenhower for not having made the issue a focal one at Geneva, Harriman asserted, "This must not happen again."

Inveterate Cold-Warrior

This declaration by Harriman is consistent with his cold-war record. He has frequently assailed the Administration for an alleged "softening" of attitude toward the Soviet Union, and during his 1956 bid for the Democratic Presidential nomination, his backers publicized him as one of the very first advocates of the cold war. For this multi-millionaire banker, the restoration of capitalism in East Europe by U.S. military forces — in the lying name of "liberation" — remains an unswerving perspective. His goal, however, runs directly counter to the avowed aims of the East European masses.

These masses badly want emancipation from Kremlin tyranny — there can be no question about that. But they intend to secure it without turning back the economic and social clock. They want democracy based on the present nationalized property forms. As in the Soviet Union itself, the elimination of capitalism in East Europe and the establishment of the planned nationalized economy has laid the foundation for genuine social progress. The masses of East Europe want an end to bureaucratic dictatorship precisely to proceed further with the construction of socialism.

Their deep conviction on this score can readily be understood simply by recalling the horrible conditions that existed in most of these countries prior to the post-war social transformations. Recall the blighted, semi-feudal economy — the tyrannical, pro-fascist dictatorships, including Horthy's in Hungary, Pilsudski's in Poland, the reactionary regency in Yugoslavia and Iron-Guard rule in Rumania.

To Whom Is Harriman Pitching?

One is given a forecast of what the restoration of capitalism in East Europe would mean by noting the activity of the various cliques in this country who present themselves as representatives of mythical "governments in exile." They are the vilest, most vociferous advocates of "preventive war" against the Soviet Union and of heightened witch-hunt hysteria. New Yorkers were given a taste of their politics when the Hungarian group led by Bela Fabian tried to disrupt an anti-nuclear test rally and Fabian sought to smear pacifist leader A. J. Muste as a "Kremlin agent."

Yet it is precisely these groups that Harriman is pitching to with his demagogic talk about bringing "freedom" to East Europe. His speech was delivered to a gathering of the nationalities division of the Democratic Party as part of such a vote-catching operation.

The people of East Europe, along with the people of the Soviet Union, will finally win their political freedom. But they will do it without the Harrimans and against the Harrimans.

Those in this country who recognize how progressive this will be, can best lend their support by building an effective political opposition to both Democratic and Republican cold-war parties. Among other things, such a movement will help assure that the people of East Europe can settle accounts with the bureaucrats without risk of being exploited by Wall Street and its political spokesmen.

An Injury to One

That labor has a vital stake in defending the Negro people against racist attacks is something that socialists have steadily maintained. Every act of violence against the Negro people—and against the Jewish people, too,—is a blow ultimately aimed at the unions. Labor cannot stand by idly but must act in accordance with the principle that an injury to one is an injury to all.

The truth of this proposition is amply demonstrated by the organized campaign of terrorism launched in past weeks in major cities in the South. It is directed simultaneously against Negroes, Jews and unionists.

The Jacksonville Jewish Center and a Negro school, the James Weldon Johnson School, were both dynamited in Jacksonville, Florida, April 28. On the same day an unsuccessful attempt was made to blow up a synagogue in Birmingham, Alabama. Also on April 28 a death threat was made against Wallace Marlowe, president of Local 1197, Amalgamated Motor Coach and Electric Street Car Workers, now on strike.

The newspaper, the Florida Times Union, received a call, April 28, from the same person who told of the bombings. The anonymous caller said, "I just wanted to tell you we would have blown up the Labor Temple 48 hours ago (Saturday) when it was full of people if our fuse hadn't gone bad, and we're going to succeed this time. We want to get at that Wallace Marlowe especially. We're going to get him, too."

Who are the authors of this violence? It is no secret that the White Citizens Councils in the South abet violence and that the Ku Klux Klan perpetrates it. To these racist organizations is now added a third outfit called the "Confederate Underground."

The FBI claims lack of jurisdiction and refuses to investigate. Defense against the racists must be organized jointly by the labor movement and the Negro and Jewish people. Union leaders in the North must rush aid to help them achieve this.

The Accra Conference

To the chagrin of the Wall Street imperialists and what are now their junior partners—the British, French, Dutch, Belgian and Portuguese colonialists—the wave of anti-imperialism continues to roll on. It started in Asia at the end of World War II, inundated the Middle East a few years later and now is penetrating Africa.

A new high-water mark is the recently concluded conference of African states in Accra, the capital of Ghana. There the foreign ministers of the United Arab Republic (Egypt, Syria and Yemen), Morocco, Tunisia, Libya, Sudan, Ethiopia, Liberia and Ghana met for two weeks. The coming together of the independent Arab and Negro nations marks a great step forward in the struggle for a completely independent Africa.

Fittingly, the conference seated Algerian freedom-fighters and demanded that France end its military occupation of their country and that the U.S. stop direct and indirect aid to that occupation. Spokesmen for the independence movements in the Cameroons and Italian Somaliland also addressed the conference.

The conference denounced white supremacy in African colonies and South Africa, called for increased economic, cultural and diplomatic cooperation between member states, a foreign policy of "non-entanglement" with the great power blocs, and an end to the production and testing of nuclear bombs. These were the resolutions of a new and important force—nations representing a third of Africa's 200 million people. And this force will grow. The nationalist movement in Nigeria has already forced from Great Britain a promise of independence in 1960 and five days after the conference's close the independence forces in French Togoland won a smashing election victory.

The promise of this first conference of African states was well summed up by Kwame Nkrumah, Prime Minister of Ghana, in the closing words of his keynote address: "Today we are one. If in the past the Sahara divided us, now it unites us. And an injury to one is an injury to all of us. From this conference must go out a new message—Hands off Africa! Africa must be free."

Socialism's Appeal in Asia

Speaking at an anti-colonialism rally April 24, Indonesian President Sukarno told his cheering audience, "The dangers of the A-bomb and the H-bomb—all born of the capitalistic system—should be wiped out." Declaring that the movement to accomplish this end was growing rapidly, Sukarno said: "The new era will be marked by socialism and the brotherhood of man and the fall of capitalism and imperialism, which is an historical certainty."

Sukarno's declaration is a dramatic testimonial to the socialist consciousness that now pervades the ranks of the Asian national independence movement. His remarks assume particular significance in that he is himself not a socialist but a spokesman for the Indonesian capitalist class. Resisting the continuing pressures of Dutch and U.S. imperialism, Indonesian capitalists would be helpless without the support of the Indonesian masses. Consequently, they are increasingly compelled to speak in terms of the socialist future which the Indonesian people are determined to achieve.

The revolutionary direction of the Indonesian workers was sharply expressed during the period of the nationalization of various remaining Dutch holdings last December. The Indonesian government, which first saw the move as a means of exerting pressure on the Dutch for further improvement in economic relations, found they were faced with swift independent action by the Indonesian workers who were taking over Dutch holdings in their own name. To stem this movement the government had to step up its own nationalization efforts.

It is now reported that Washington is much concerned by the socialist declarations of Sukarno whom they were hailing yesterday as another Thomas Jefferson. Their concern is not so much with Sukarno as with the Indonesian masses whose intentions are mirrored in Sukarno's speeches.

Program to Fight Unemployment

The Militant proposes the following as immediate measures to combat the depression:

- (1) Organization of the unemployed by the labor movement. For union unemployed committees to fight their jobless members' grievances on rehiring, unemployment compensation, rent, mortgage and installment payments, relief, etc.
- (2) Unemployment compensation to all jobless for the entire period of unemployment at trade-union wages.
- (3) A 30-hour week at 40 hours' pay to be the number one demand of all unions in contract negotiations. Amend federal and state wage-and-hours laws to include 30-for-40.
- (4) A giant public works program at trade-union wages to build all the schools, hospitals, low-cost housing, highways and other useful and peaceful construction needed in this country today.
- (5) Union action and FEP laws to prevent discrimination in layoffs, rehiring, unemployment compensation, public-works hiring, relief, etc.
- (6) A debt moratorium for the unemployed. No evictions or foreclosures on homes, autos or appliances.
- (7) No taxes on yearly incomes of $7,500 or less. End withholding and sales taxes to restore workers' purchasing power. Tax the rich and the corporations.
- (8) A long-term trade agreement with the Soviet Union and People's Republic of China. Combat unemployment by filling large-scale orders from these countries for industrial and farm equipment in exchange for raw materials. Extend the credits necessary for such job-creating trade.
- (9) Build a Labor Party based on the unions in alliance with minority peoples and working farmers.

Philadelphia Students Meet on Right to Travel

PHILADELPHIA, April 27 — "Preserve the Right to Travel" was the subject of an all-day conference at Houston Hall of the University of Pennsylvania today.

The meeting was held there after the University's International House canceled the scheduled use of its hall on the ground that the subject was too "controversial." Despite this action by International House, Cy Doman, its Program Director, acted as chairman of the meeting. More than 50 people attended the conference, including students from Swarthmore, Drexel, Temple and local high schools, as well as from the U. of P. itself.

Speakers were David Cohen, national chairman of Students for Democratic Action; Attorney Bart Harrison of the American Friends Service Committee; Dr. B. Bodde, professor of Chinese at the University of Pennsylvania; and Ben Daniels, one of the students who traveled to China last year in defiance of the State Department ban.

David Cohen declared the right to travel is directly related to academic freedom and urged support to the stand of the National Student's Association for long-term student exchange with China.

INHERENT RIGHT

While the right to travel is not specifically mentioned in the U.S. Constitution or Bill of Rights, Bart Harrison explained, it is in fact a part of British common law which U.S. Courts recognize. Travel, he said, is an inherent right, not a "privilege" to be granted or denied by the State Department.

Dr. Bodde discussed the other side of the problem—the difficulties of getting into this country. He said the American people are suffering culturally and scientifically as a result of stringent entry regulations. He declared his belief that anyone has the right to travel, including members of the Communist Party.

Ben Daniels said that he and those who traveled to China with him, are fighting for the return of their passports. He emphasized that they didn't violate any law in traveling to China, that the only issue involved is arbitrary State Department regulations. These regulations are now being challenged in the courts.

After a vigorous pro and con discussion, a right-to-travel resolution was adopted and a temporary committee set up to rally support on the issue from the various campuses in the area. Following is the text of the resolution:

"We, the participants in a Conference on the Right to Travel held in Philadelphia, April 27th, recognize that our right to travel has been restricted by the U.S. State Department.

"The revocation of these passports represents an abrogation of Constitutional rights: as related to students—it attacks academic freedom and the freedom of speech portion of the First Amendment; as related to newsmen—it attacks freedom of the press as stated in the First Amendment and is a violation of the right to 'life, liberty and property' with protection of due process of law.

"We, therefore, call for the return of their passports to the visitors to China and for the restoration to the people of America of their right to travel."

Socialist Club Wins UCLA Campus Rights

By Della Rossa

LOS ANGELES — The recently-formed Eugene V. Debs Club at the University of California at Los Angeles has won an important civil liberties victory and will now be permitted to use campus facilities for public meetings even though it staunchly maintained refusal to turn over its membership list to university officials.

The Debs Club, a socialist discussion group organized in the fall semester, was supported in its fight by the student group of the American Civil Liberties Union, which also won campus privileges recently under UCLA's new Regulation 17. Only the Debs Club was asked for a membership list.

In protesting the membership list requirement, the Debs Club wrote to the Dean of Students: "The right of free assembly and association is voided with the required submission of membership and attendance lists, whose potential use for later recriminations already constitutes a present form of intimidation, serving to frighten people from gathering with others of similar interest. . . .

"We believe that a reputation must be built for UCLA as a university where everything in the way of ideas is welcome for the sake of intellectual investigation, as an arena where a fast-maturing generation of youth can train itself to think and analyze the enormous problems facing it."

Elated by their victory, the Debs Club plans a campus meeting, April 25, when they will have as their speaker one of the 41 students who went to the Moscow Youth Festival and then to China, thereby risking their U.S. passports.

High Court in N.Y. Upholds Teachers' Refusal to Inform

APRIL 30 — An important victory was won this week when the Appellate Division of the New York State Supreme Court, April 28, upheld the right of three New York City school teachers, a principal and a clerk to refuse to become stoolpigeons. The five, plus Prof. Charles W. Hugh of Hunter College, were suspended from their jobs in September 1955 for refusing to name past associates as "Communists."

The New York City educators have been subjected to prolonged persecution. Former State Commissioner of Education Lewis A. Wilson issued a stay against the suspensions on the ground that "a Board of Education is without power to require a teacher to answer questions relating to possible knowledge of other persons who may have been associated with the Communist Party." Subsequently Commissioner James E. Allen Jr. took the same position. The New York City Boards of Education and Higher Education, however, continued the attempt to impose the infamous "inform-or-else" policy on the City. The State Supreme Court backed the teachers, and now has been supported by the Appellate Division.

The Teachers' Union wired those responsible for the long persecution of the teachers: "We trust the Board of Education will accept the Appellate Division's unanimous affirmation of Judge Taylor's opinion as final . . . and reinstate the five school employees. . . ."

involved; then after getting involved, contended that victory would secure the world for democracy and end all wars. "Their record of prediction demonstrates that they either understood nothing or consciously deceived the people with their propaganda. Lenin alone correctly characterized the epoch in which we live as one of 'wars and revolutions.' The years that followed Lenin's description of our age demonstrated again the validity of the science of Marxism."

WHAT MILITANT SAID

To show that Marxists today have also shown their scientific grasp of contemporary history, Mrs. Weiss described the popular mood that followed World War II. "Everyone rejoiced," she said, "for the bloodshed had ended and once more the world was 'made safe for democracy.' But the Socialist paper, the Militant, voiced a discordant note. Following V-J day the Militant came out with a banner headline that said simply: 'There Is No Peace.' All too soon, unfortunately, the Marxists were again proved correct."

Then Mrs. Weiss explained the economic necessity for expansion under capitalism and the resulting conflict between separate economies. "The road to peace," she concluded, "lies in the struggle for socialism which alone can unify the world."

A lively discussion followed. Most of the questions, as at the other student gatherings, centered around the problem of preventing the development of an oppressive bureaucracy in a socialist America. The radio interview following the student meeting also discussed the question of peace. In addition Mrs. Weiss was questioned about the economic situation, civil liberties and the problem of corruption in the labor movement.

Mrs. Weiss was accompanied by a representative of the Young Socialist Alliance, Mrs. Martha Wohlforth, who distributed the Young Socialist and discussed with interested students the question of organized socialist studies on campus.

HOW TO WIN FREEDOM

At Wellesley, Mrs. Weiss spoke on "Socialism and America." Her central theme was the struggle for freedom, "not merely juridical freedom, fought for and won by past generations, but a great new freedom, including freedom from fear and freedom from want. This kind of freedom can be won only in the struggle for socialism."

Mrs. Weiss was especially pleased that students at the all-women's college of Wellesley were so interested in controversial political questions.

At Brandeis University, she was advertised as speaking on the question: "How Can We Successfully Compete Against Communism." Mrs. Weiss pointed out that the title misrepresented her views. "This question might interest the U.S. State Department and Big Business, but it certainly doesn't interest the socialists," she said. The task is to "end competition and begin the era of world cooperation. If we fail to accomplish this task, another war may mean the end of civilization."

Castro Revolt Fails

Flames shoot from a gas main, broken during street fighting in Havana in last month's abortive Castro-led revolution against Batista's dictatorship. Cuban government sources claimed at least 40 rebels were killed in the capital. Most of Havana population did not support the rising.

Cuba Enacts Cruel Laws Against People

By Lillian Kiesel

After the recent failure of the attempted overthrow of his regime by Fidel Castro, Cuban Dictator Batista has been cracking the whip over the people.

A state of "national emergency" has already existed since April 1 when Castro declared "all-out war" against Batista. It will be in effect until May 15 and gives Batista unlimited powers including authorization to assume the legislative functions of Congress.

On April 26, the Cuban dictator suspended such basic constitutional rights as free speech and free assembly for another 45 days. This means that, except for territory in Oriente province held by the Castro forces, the Cuban people have had democratic rights for only 45 days this year—and these mostly on paper.

"Throughout the island," says the April 28 New York Times, "jails are full and the armed forces continue to arrest youths suspected of being connected with the 26th of July Movement led by Castro." Censorship of press and radio, which is considered the tightest in the history of the country, continues.

In addition, Batista's cabinet dissolved all boards of education because the majority of members are known to be opposed to his regime. The student youth movement, which constituted one of the strongest sections of support for Castro, had been on strike for months before the attempted revolution. Finally, all military academies have been placed under the control of the defense ministry.

The need to redouble the repressive measures testifies that the determination of the Cuban people to free themselves from Batista's tyranny is far from spent. Actually, the motive for popular revolution is ever-present, as the Wall Street Journal, which is pro-Batista, admits.

"The timing of the [Castro] revolt, which now appears waning but could flare anew, was not quite as poor as it might seem," says the April 17 Journal. Batista confronts serious economic problems. Among the most important of them is that, although the gross national product reached an all-time high of $2.7 billion in 1957, the jobless total in Cuba averaged 361,000, or 16.4% of the labor force as of April last year.

"This would be the equivalent of 11 million unemployed in the United States during a period when our gross national product was reaching a new high." In addition the economy is highly inflationary. The national debt is admitted officially to be $850 million.

AMERICAN INVESTMENTS

Batista's dictatorship is also the protector of $800 million worth of American investments. This is what controls the Cuban economy. It is the reason for its remaining one-sided, with one quarter of the gross national product being sugar. "This is another problem hardly making for economic stability," says the Wall Street Journal.

Still, U.S. Big Businessmen with investments in Cuba are determined to back Batista. They figure that at the very least he's their cheapest bet. As Ward Cannel cynically observes in the April 15 New York World Telegram after his return from Cuba, "A democratic government would mean more people to pay off when tax exemptions and other revised laws for business are needed."

But far worse could happen, too. The Cuban workers and farmers could take advantage of democratic freedoms to organize against U.S. exploitation and end it once for all.

Pauling Pamphlet On Effect of Tests

EVERY TEST KILLS. By Linus Pauling, New York, Liberation, 16 pages, 10 cents.

The pacifist magazine, Liberation, has performed a useful service in making available in pamphlet form this article by the Nobel prize-winning bio-chemist which originally appeared in its February, 1958, issue.

A courageous fighter who has sparked the anti-bomb movement among scientists, Dr. Pauling provides a hard-hitting exposure of the lying propaganda designed to conceal the terrible results of nuclear testing. He also presents a stark picture of the meaning of nuclear war.

"It can be estimated," writes Dr. Pauling, "that in a third world war as many as eight hundred million people would be killed by the blast, fire and immediate radiation effects of the nuclear bombs . . . hundreds of millions of seriously defective children would be born in succeeding generations, and the human race as we know it might cease to exist."

Dr. Pauling is concerned not only with such a ghastly possible future, but also with the toll already being taken by nuclear explosions. On the basis of available statistics, he calculates that "the testing of nuclear weapons will have an effect on the health of human beings that are now living equivalent to causing one million people to die ten years earlier than if the tests had not been conducted . . . the probable effect of bomb testing at the present rate would be to increase by 5,000 the number of seriously defective children born each year."

With the AEC about to explode more superbombs in the Pacific, the American people will do well to ponder these words by Dr. Pauling: "The leader of a nation testing nuclear weapons should know that when he gives the order to explode a superbomb . . . he is probably dooming 1,500 people to die of leukemia, tens of thousands more to die of bone cancer and other diseases, and 100,000 seriously defective children to be born in future generations."

Who Profits from Farming?

Industrial unemployment and soaring food prices are making some workers envy the farmers who, they believe, are "cleaning up." Well, the millionaire farmers, the farm corporations and the food processing companies are cleaning up, but the working farmers and farm laborers are having a rough time. The former are being squeezed off their small farms, the latter barely exist on their miserable wages. This accounts for the estimated drop in the U.S. farm population in 1957 of over a million. Since 1950 the exodus totals over 4½ million. So today there are only some 20.3 million persons living on farms.

The 1954 U.S. census counted less than five million farms. Of these the big ones—a mere 3% of the total—had over 22% of the acreage, produced over 31% of the total output, and employed more than 20% of the two million farm laborers. On the other hand one million small farmers (who operate over 1/3 of all the commercial farms in the country) had a gross (not net) income of less than $2,500 a year.

But what about all the federal money that goes to the farmers in subsidies, etc.? Little, if any, goes to the family farmer and none to the farm laborers. But the big boys get theirs. Over $500 million in direct cash payments went principally to corporation farms last year in the "soil bank" program. One "farmer" alone received over a quarter million dollars ($278,187.38, to be precise) last year under that program.

In contrast, some 118,000 small farmers with no other source of credit received $342.5 million in loans (not payments) from the Farmers Home Administration last year. The average loan was less than $2,000.

The billions in federal farm aid go to the big farms and corporations while the disappearing family-sized farms get mere crumbs. It is even worse for the farm laborers. With no minimum wage, maximum hour laws, unemployment compensation or social security to protect them, they live in the best of times on the narrow edge of starvation. A bad break in weather—a freeze or flood—let alone a man-made disaster like a recession, can push them over the brink. Thus the crop freeze in Florida brought this: "... Whole families are forced to live in the open ... Many are making homes in cardboard and other kinds of makeshift shacks in the woods ..." (Miami Daily News, Feb. 22, 1958). Floods followed by a cold wave brought this in Tennessee: "... Literally thousands of farm families in the 'Mississippi bottoms' area actually are hungry and facing starvation unless help comes quickly ..." (Atlanta Journal-Constitution, Jan. 12, 1958).

The above facts and quotations come from a report of the National Sharecroppers Fund, 112 E. 19 St., New York 3, N.Y., an organization which deserves the support of all class-conscious workers.

The Expendables

By Ted Kovalesky

First comes the unbelievable shock, sound and fury of the blast, then the flames spreading out in a great, growing circle. Then comes the dust, a burning poison that settles inexorably down upon the broken and charred earth and upon the dead and upon those yet living. They call it radioactive fallout. It scars and cripples and kills.

This tiny sketch describes briefly the detonation of a hydrogen bomb. It might be New York, San Francisco, Chicago, Buffalo or Boston crushed under the explosion. Your own home, the factory where you work, might be part of the rubble, or it might be ... nothing, nothing at all, completely and totally erased from existence.

But let us complete the picture. What comes next?

Next come the expendables. Driven from such miserable shelter as they could find, collected and herded together, they creep out through the poisoned muck to commence the task of cleanup, rebuilding, or decontamination. They are the men of forty to fifty years of age. They are expendable.

Fantastic? Horrible? It is both. But it is more. This is a plan already projected by an officer of the U.S. Navy's Radiological Defense Laboratory at San Francisco; and if the imperialist rulers of this land continue their drive toward war, you may live to see it put into operation.

Capt. A. R. Behnke explains it this way. The young would be kept temporarily in shelters. They must be safeguarded so that they will be fit for breeding purposes later on. But men in their forties or fifties would be "used" in the first despairing attempts at reconstruction. The captain feels that genetically men of this age are pretty well washed up.

And in addition there is the matter of cancer. The exact words of the New York Post, which presented Capt. Behnke's plan to a somewhat less than eager reading public, were: "As to the middle-aged men, exposure to fallout might (!) carry a cancer hazard, he said, but the men would be of such an age at the time of exposure that they might well live out a close-to-normal life span and die of something else before cancer had time to develop."

The captain is bold in matter but mild in manner. If you are forty or fifty years old you may be thrown out to work in a cloud of radioactive poison. But you don't have too much longer to live anyhow, so what's the difference? You'll probably be lucky enough to die of something else anyway before the radiation-induced cancer has time to kill you.

The cold-blooded captain's plan brings to mind many things. First, there is the matter of civilization and progress. Certain ancient tribes used to drive their aged members out to die. They had to. The aged could not contribute to the welfare of the tribe, and life was so hard that no one who did not contribute could be supported. It was a stern necessity that the rest of the tribe might live. But we are supposed to have advanced beyond such savagery. And surely men of forty, or even fifty, should be able to contribute to society in this day and age. But no, they are expendable.

And it also brings to mind a slogan we used to hear a great deal a few years back: "Life begins at forty." At forty, the idea went, you really began to live. The words have an ironic ring. Under the decaying capitalist system we face with increasing frequency the alternatives of war or depression. In a depression a man of forty is unemployable. And in a war, he has become expendable.

How Racism Smashed the Strike in Southern Town

By John Thayer

In its Jan. 30 issue, United Paper, the monthly organ of the AFL-CIO United Papermakers and Paperworkers, has a very interesting article by its editor, Henry Paley. It is a five-page history of unionism in the town of Bogalusa, Louisiana. Histories of union locals, particularly in the South, are all too rare considering the valuable lessons to be learned from them. Valuable not merely for students but for the organizers who will have to do the job from which the AFL-CIO leadership so far has flinched—unionizing the South.

UNION COMMUNITY

Bogalusa is an exception to the rule. It is a small city in the Deep South where a union has achieved stability and considerable influence in community affairs. The story calls it a "model union community." Yet it has a bloody history.

Originally it was a company town owned by the Great Southern Lumber Co. which typically was owned by Northern capital and had its headquarters in Buffalo, N.Y. In 1918, on the crest of wartime demand for paper and wood products, Great Southern was coining money out of Bogalusa. It had there the biggest lumber mill in the world; the minimum wage was somewhat below 30 cents an hour; it owned the houses, doctors, town officials, newspaper editor, etc. The atmosphere then somewhat resembled the one we know today: production was spurred with appeals to "beat the Huns," there were spy scares, and witch hunts for pacifists and pro-Germans.

COMPANY MOVES

So when the first union organizer came to town in the spring of 1919 it was a simple matter for the police to arrest him on suspicion, "find" a package of blasting caps in his suitcase, and with the cooperation of the Department of Justice run him out of town.

Nevertheless, union ideas, which were sweeping the whole U.S. that year, filtered into Bogalusa. The company tried to forestall their effect with two "voluntary" wage increases, bringing the minimum wage to between 33 and 35 cents an hour. It also boosted rents on the company-owned houses and deductions for medical care.

Unionism spread and that fall the company started firing and evicting known union men. Then it began a lockout. Scores left town, an unknown number changing their names in an attempt to escape the blacklist the company circulated to the rest of the industry. The lockout became a strike when the powerhouse, railroad and maintenance crews walked out on Oct. 19, 1919.

The AFL Carpenters Union, which took over leadership of the strike, tried to remain within the limits of the South's Jim-Crow code by putting the workers into separate white and Negro locals. "There was no race issue in the strike, ... our whole fight was to get a decent living," white survivors of those days in Bogalusa still declare. "There was no talk of race mixing. The colored had their union and we had ours."

The Negro workers swallowed this bitter pill apparently on the grounds that a segregated local was better than no local. Thus the AFL strategists had every reason to believe they could carry on a straight economic strike without entangling in the race issue. Hadn't they disarmed the white supremacists by setting up separate locals? Hadn't they nonetheless achieved harmony between Negro and white strikers?

Unconvinced, the bosses saw in the race issue the Achilles' heel of the union struggle. The back files of the Bogalusa Enterprise & Examiner, the company-dominated newspaper, show that with the lockout the race issue became a regular and prominent feature. Stories of lynchings in nearby communities appeared and were played up. A local forerunner of the American Legion, called the Self-Preservation and Loyal Legion, was formed. Composed of company management personnel, KKK elements and war veterans (there were more vets in the strikers' ranks, however) it tried to play both sides of the streets. It promised protection to Negro workers who would return to work and at the same time it made forays into the Negro community hunting for Negro union leaders.

PLAN LYNCHING

Thus on Nov. 21 an armed group of Loyal Legionnaires went to the home of Sol Dacus, president of the Negro local. The newspaper reports this incident as follows: "He [Dacus] is charged with having been very active in agitating the Negroes. A committee went to his home on Friday evening to notify him that his presence in Bogalusa was no longer desired. Dacus was not at home but is reported to have gone to the swamps on receiving the news." The story ominously referred to Dacus as a "bad Negro," a description which the paper that year reserved for those destined to end as victims of lynch mobs.

Dacus hid that night and next day got word to the officers of the white union local. Two of them, carrying arms, escorted him through town to the white local's headquarters

— a garage belonging to local president "Lum" Williams. Upon learning this, the police issued a warrant for Dacus and his two defenders and gave it for serving to a group of 15 to 20 Legionnaires. Carrying rifles and shotguns they converged on the garage as the plant blew its "riot whistle."

Six white unionists were trapped in the garage — apparently they had spirited Dacus away before the posse arrived for he was never seen in town again. Of the unionists four were killed, the other two wounded.

TERROR AND JIM-CROW

The massacre began an all-out reign of terror. Remaining union officials were thrown out of Bogalusa and upon their return run out again. The press and the Loyal League beat the drums of white supremacy. The workers were divided and the union crumbled.

Where is there a clearer example of the bosses' use of racism to smash a union? Where is there a clearer example of the futility of trying to appease the racists or deprive the bosses of the weapon of racism by setting up segregated locals?

Unionism disappeared in Bogalusa until 1935. Efforts to organize then began but didn't bear fruit until 1939 when the first contract was won after an NLRB election. Different management and the prospect of wartime orders apparently led the company to recognize the union without a strike. But the full story hasn't yet been written because the present union has not been through the test by fire that overwhelmed it in 1919. Would it survive such a test today? That is impossible to state in advance. But such a test is an ever-present possibility for an union in the open-shop South.

TWO LOCALS

One weakness that the article in United Paper glosses over is that even today the union has two locals — Local 189 for white workers and Local 189-A for Negro workers. This self-division of a union is an open invitation to the bosses to complete the division. Moreover, actual test cases, such as that of the Louisiana sugar workers organized by the Packinghouse Workers Union, show that an integrated local can triumph in the battle that smashed the Bogalusa paperworkers in 1919.

There are other shortcomings in "The Bogalusa Story" in United Paper. For example, it quotes the white workers' views on the "model union community" but neglects the views of Negro workers. Despite such obvious defects the article has sufficient merits to deserve a reading by all union militants and fighters for Negro equality.

The Heikkila Deportation

Public Hits Govt.'s Gestapo-Like Tactics

By Roy Gale

SAN FRANCISCO, April 26 — Mass indignation in this country, an international black eye and a judge's declaration that it smacked of "the Gestapo and the rack

Defense Group Hits Deportation Policies

The Workers Defense League has urged immediate action for the passage of legislation to prevent repetition of abductions by the Immigration Department as in the case of William Heikkila. The demand was made in the form of a letter to Senator Hennings (D-Mo.), who has pledged to push for such legislation. Signed by Norman Thomas, honorary President of the League, and Vera Rony, National Secretary, the letter cited previous cases in which it had acted, cases which demonstrate that the brutal treatment of Heikkila was not an isolated episode.

The letter recalled the case of five Indonesians who were deported prior to Indonesian independence and have never been heard from again, a Polish refugee from Soviet prison camps saved from deportation only because he attempted suicide at the airport, and a Dominican who escaped deportation only because the car taking him to the airport broke down, giving the League just time to obtain a temporary stay of deportation.

William Heikkila, born 52 years ago in Finland and brought to this country as an infant, was returned home by the U.S. Immigration Department whose officials kidnapped him eight days ago and had him flown out of the country. The bare facts of what happened to Heikkila were enough to make people wonder if they were living in the 20th Century. He was accosted by Immigration agents as he stepped from the building where he works, forcibly thrown into "a black limousine," sped to the airport, put on an Immigration plane to Canada, there held incommunicado in prison under another name, and then flown to Finland.

His wife and attorney were denied any information as to his whereabouts; demands for information met a wall of silence. Even a federal judge was unable to squeeze any information from tight-lipped Immigration officials. But popular indignation unsealed the government's lips and compelled it to reveal the scandalous facts of the kidnapping. What came to light moved Senator Hennings (D-Mo.) to castigate the episode as "reminiscent of gangland's one-way ride."

COURT ACTION

The battle to get Heikkila back home was waged on several fronts, including effective court action that won an injunction against deportation and a contempt citation for the Immigration official directly responsible.

Widespread publicity on the case deepened public anger as the whole story became known. Heikkila had but a dollar and a half in his pocket when he was seized and was not even wearing a top coat. In the Canadian prison hospital where he was held incognito, he was denied medicine he needed. His protests against the treatment being accorded him and even his requests for information were met with threat of physical violence.

Heikkila is not the first person to be hustled out of the country in one of the Immigration Department's planes. Only last February, Martin Jimenez was forcibly returned to Mexico under similar circumstances. If the airplane seat that Heikkila occupied could talk it would tell a story of thousands of Mexican workers flown to the border and dumped there without any regard to due process of law. The significant and heartening aspect of Heikkila's case is that this is the first time that the Immigration Department has been compelled to admit its "mistake" and return the victim.

Further, the Congressional investigations promised as a result of this international scandal can expose the whole reactionary Immigration Department set-up and attack the source of the evil — namely, the Walter-McCarran Immigration Act.

"I Too Am A Heikkila Case"

(The following are excerpts from a letter published April 29 in the New York Post.)

May I offer you my deepest appreciation for your exposure of the Heikkila case. ... I am greatly concerned with this revelation of such news to the American people because I believe that if they knew the sordid police methods being used by our Immigration Dept. they would rise with indignation and demand a change.

I know because I too am a Heikkila case. I was brought here when I was a year old. I was under the impression that my parents were naturalized, but I found out differently when I reached voting age. I applied for citizenship; I never received it because, under the McCarran-Walter law, I am considered a terrible, dangerous subversive.

During the depression I had liberal ideas and wanted to do something about unemployment. In 1934, I was charged with having Communist ideas. I was arrested six years ago and have been forced to report to the Immigration people every week. I must report whom I see, what I do and where I work.

I have been hounded and fired from five jobs because my employers were frightened after immigration officers queried them about me. I am so restricted that I cannot travel more than 50 miles away from the city without special written permission 48 hours in advance. I must tell them where I stay and whom I see. I must report to the police wherever I go.

I have not had anything to do with politics for 20 years. I have children born in this country, yet I am in danger of being deported any moment. It is only through my last-ditch efforts in the courts that I am allowed to remain here — the only country I know.

I too face the sudden fear of sudden kidnapping as happened to Heikkila. I never know when two men will suddenly pounce on me and cart me off on some plane bound for a country they claim is supposed to be mine. I know my family would be deprived of all my help and support.

I belong to no organizations. I associate with nobody that is the least radical. I am isolated from people and ideas that are controversial. I have to be. Because otherwise when I report for my weekly immigration visit they could clap me in jail for violating my parole conditions. ...

This is why I feel so deeply about this Heikkila matter. Someone somewhere must look into the McCarran-Walter Act and the methods the Immigration Dept. uses to confuse it. ...

For obvious reasons I cannot sign my true name. The Immigration Dept. would seize me instantly, suspend my parole and throw me out of the country. Please understand.

NAME WITHHELD

Poster symbolic of first 6,400 signatures to initiate new national appeal for Sobell's freedom is held by Mrs. Rose Sobell, Morton's mother, and Helen Sobell, his wife. At left is the Rev. Peter McCormack, former Protestant chaplain at Alcatraz, now speaking for Sobell's freedom. Petitions can be obtained at the Sobell Committee, 940 Broadway, New York City.

Hold Successful Meets For Sobell in Michigan

DETROIT, April 29 — Helen Sobell's visit here last week produced both new and revived interest in efforts to win justice for her husband, Morton Sobell, victim of the cold-war witch hunt.

A well-attended meeting at Central Methodist Church gained scores of new volunteers to work with the local Sobell committee. Mrs. Sobell was introduced by Dr. Henry Hitt Crane, who urged the audience to "develop a sensitized conscience and develop the olfactory senses so that you can smell injustice."

The case was also introduced to many young people who had never heard of it before. Mrs. Sobell spoke to Eastern Michigan College students at Ypsilanti, University of Michigan students at Ann Arbor, and Wayne State University students in Detroit.

In addition, she met with a number of prominent figures in Detroit, obtaining important new signatures to the appeal to the President for executive commutation or a new trial for her husband.

A half-hour interview with Mrs. Sobell was taped by Station WJR, and a 15-minute interview was made by the university station, WDET.

Publicity on the case appeared in two of the three daily papers, the Jewish News, Glos Ludowy, FOR News and the Wayne Collegian. The Detroit News article ended with the true words: "The most famous spy case of this century will not fade easily."

Detroit Forum Group Plans Symposium

DETROIT — A symposium on "The 1958 Elections and Socialist Perspectives" will be held here at the Central Methodist Church, Woodward and East Adams, on Thursday, May 8, at 8 p.m.

It is sponsored by a committee for a United Detroit Forum, which ran a symposium on the war question last month. The questions to be considered will be: To what extent should labor support the Democratic Party? Is a labor party possible at this time? What about independent socialist candidates? What are the important issues in the 1958 campaign? By what method can the cause of peace and socialism be best advanced?

All radical groups have been invited to send speakers. The Socialist Workers Party has already indicated that it will send one.
